If you are hoping to learn about the history of your house and its occupants, one good place to start is by tracing its ownership. Start with the most recent deed and move backwards through time; most deeds provide a citation to how the seller acquired the land, so you can trace the chain of title that way. See the Maryland State Archives' excellent description of the different land records at <http://guide.mdsa.net/viewer.cfm?page=landrecords>. The State Archives has digitized many of the land records, and they are available at <http://www.mdlandrec.net> (you will need to apply for a password, but you can do this online and the State Archives will e-mail you a password within several days). You might also try the State Archives' digitized plats collections at <http://plats.net> (again, you will need to ask for a password).

Of course, land records do not necessarily tell you anything about the buildings that have been on that site. For that, you probably will need to check several different types of records. A good starting point is the Maryland Department of Assessments and Taxation's Real Property Search at http://sdatcert3.resiusa.org/rp_rewrite/. You can search for property by street address or several different reference numbers, and the results include information about when the structure on the property was built and its size.

If your property is historic, it may be included on a local, state, or national register. County governments and Baltimore City have lists of historic properties; check your local government's home page for information. The Maryland Historical Trust, a state agency not affiliated with the MdHS, maintains the Maryland Inventory of Historic Properties. The Inventory may be searched online at <http://www.mdihp.net/> (use guest as the login and password, if asked). Finally, the National Park Service maintains the National Register of Historic Places (<http://www.cr.nps.gov/nr/>), although relatively few properties qualify.

Another place where you might find photographs or other information is at a local library. County, city, and town historical societies often have photographs, clipping files, or other materials relating to local buildings. See <http://www.msa.md.gov/msa/mdmanual/01glance/html/museumsh.html> for an up-to-date list. The local history rooms of public libraries also collect similar materials.

STATEWIDE

Special Collections—Statewide

- Aubrey Bodine Photograph Collection, has 12,000 negatives from one of Maryland's premier 20th-century photographers; the photos include the entire state but focus most heavily on Baltimore and areas around the Chesapeake Bay (BCLM)
- County Courthouse Photograph Collection, 1954 (PP155)
- Historic American Buildings Survey (HABS) Photograph Collection, ca. 1930-1940 prints of Maryland buildings photographed as part of HABS (PP85). For the surveyors' notes and other materials, see http://memory.loc.gov/ammem/collections/habs_haer/
- Hughes Studio Photograph Collection, ca. 1910-1946 (PP8) and ca. 1940-1956, (PP30)—this Baltimore commercial photography studio captured many buildings, inside and out, all around the state
- Joseph Evans Sperry Minute Book, 1918, includes information on war-related construction collected by Sperry in his role as vice chairman of the Maryland Council of Defense (MS 622)

Miscellaneous—Statewide

- Early American Newspapers This database, accessible from the MdHS's computers, includes digitized versions of newspapers through 1922. Newspapers often printed some details about buildings, either as news items or in advertisements. This database is keyword-searchable.
- Sanborn Fire Insurance Company atlases and maps If the property you are researching is in a town, one excellent source for discovering what was on your property anywhere from forty to more than one hundred years ago is to use Sanborn fire insurance atlases. The atlases include a great deal of information about the built environment, including building dimensions, height, construction materials, etc. The MdHS has microfilm of all the Sanborn atlases for Maryland covering the periods 1885-1950 and 1950-1970; for a list of what towns and years are available, go to the entries for the Sanborn microforms in the online catalog, scroll down to the bottom, and click on “Items Available.” For the Baltimore atlases, you also may be able to consult physical copies; ask at the reference desk.

- Tax lists of 1783 and 1798 The state tax of 1783 and the federal direct tax of 1798 included taxes on buildings, and if the particular assessment is available for your county and hundred, you may find more details about the structures on your property at that time. The tax list of 1783 is the most complete of Maryland's tax records and is available on microfilm on old microfilm nos. 600-612. Those for Baltimore and Harford counties have been published. The Federal Assessment of 1798 is also a good source and is available on microfilm.
- Vertical File The Vertical File located in the MdHS Library's back room has clippings and other materials relating to buildings, especially for the Baltimore area.
