

---

MARYLAND · HISTORICAL · SOCIETY

---

Lord Baltimore Fellows
2018

Elyshia Aseltine	Associate Professor, Towson University, ongoing research on the “history of policing in Baltimore”
Daniel G. Cumming	Doctoral Candidate, New York University, dissertation research, “Nature’s Toxic Metropolis: Land, Property, Race, and the Making of a Health Crisis in Baltimore”
Paige Goldschmidt	Masters student, Auburn University, researching antebellum women and Protestant to Catholic conversion narratives, “identifying traits of distinctly American Catholicism”
Jonathan Hanna	Doctoral candidate, Claremont Graduate University, dissertation research, “the ideological development of southern Federalism in the early American republic”
Lisa Rose Lamson	Doctoral candidate, Marquette University, dissertation research “A Great Good may Proceed from the Education of These Poor Colored Girls”
Anne Lessy	Doctoral candidate, Yale University, dissertation research, “‘Force These Idlers to Accept Employment’: Labor Coercion, Racialized Gender, and the Struggle for the New Deal Warfare State”

Alan P. Marcus

Associate Professor, Towson University, ongoing research for book manuscript
“Confederados in Brazil and the Baltimore
Connection: Mobility, Trade, and the Exodus of Thousands of U.S. Southerners to Brazil”

Stephen Powell

Doctoral candidate, Mississippi State
University, dissertation research, “Struggling Loyalty in Maryland”; Reconstructing a Border
State”

Mark A. Snell

Ph.D., professor of history, retired, research for a study of the “life and times of James Archer” of Harford County

Jason Tercha

Doctoral candidate, Binghamton University, “Networking Rural American Landscapes:
Rural Perspectives on the Construction and Management of Internal Improvements in the Early American Republic”